THIS IS UNEVALUATED INFORMATION

1. I obtained the following information during my student days in China:

2. Soochow University.

the school had been moved from its normal location at Soochow to Shanghai. Soochow University consisted of three colleges, law, literature and art and science. The law school, which is considered the best in China, had always been permanently situated in Shanghai.

dean of the college of science, Dr Ching Heien Li

李慶賢

Dr Li is an excellent scholar and a very well known physicist. He was educated in China and held a PhD in physics.

4. The biology department in the College of Science was by far the best department and was nationally famous. The dean of the biology department was Prof Ying Hsu

徐蔭洪

who was a graduate of Yenching University. Dr Hsu's field was general biology.

5. the number of students at Soochow University in excess of 500. The attrition rate was very steep, being in the neighborhood of roughly 50%; the attrition rate in pre-med was even tougher. All lectures, papers and notes were given and taken in English. This was the custom in [redacted] had to invent a Chinese term for "Bunsen Burner" which would adequately describe the article and yet use some well known Chinese word. Nearly all the Chinese colleges and universities contributed to this dictionary, which was afterwards assembled by a committee located in Peking; a final draft was prepared by the committee. When I left China in late 1951, the committee was still assembling rough drafts from the various schools in China.

6. Peking Union Medical College (PUMC) at Peking was the outstanding medical college in China and perhaps even in Asia. [redacted] PUMC trains students primarily for teaching and also for specialization in the medical field and for clinical work. It was a complete medical school with extremely hard entrance exams which were given to pre-medical students from all the colleges and universities having such courses throughout China as well as Asia. PUMC used Harvard as a standard, and, as a matter of fact, most of its faculty were educated at Harvard. The departments at PUMC are divided into two divisions, pre-clinic and clinic. The pre-clinic departments, together with their deans, were:

The departments under the clinic division are:

Medicine Dr. Chang

張孝騫

Surgery Dr. Wu

吳英楷

Obstetrics and Gynecology Dr. Lim

林巧稚

All the above professors are not only well known in medical circles in China but are well known internationally.

[redacted] they now have no time for study or research but must devote all of their time to teaching greatly expanded classes and to absorbing Communist propaganda themselves.

7. West China Union University (WCUU) at Chengtu. [redacted] The university was composed of three colleges, science and arts, medicine and dentistry. [redacted] there were over 2000 students of whom approximately 20% were girls. The general standard of WCUU was lower than Soochow University, and, of course, the medical school cannot compare with PUMC. However, the college of dentistry is nationally famous in China and is an excellent one.
